AT THE GIRLS' CAMP, AT VARTY LAKE

In spite of rather disagreeable weather, punctuated by two thunder storms, Camp life went on in the daily routine. Work had to be done even if it did rain, and where there are a lot of young people together, a bit of bad weather does not dampen their ardor.

The bell rang at seven o'clock and the camp was humming in a few minutes with busy people preparing for the day's work. Breakfast over, the girls made ready their tents for inspection. This was attended to as carefully as possible because a pennant was given for the neatest tent, and everyone was anxious to carry home a trophy.

Each day was fully occupied with what is called the four-fold life. The motto of C. G. I. T. work is taken from the passage in Scripture, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man." The work was arranged in such a way as to give a portion of time to each side of the motto and so teach the girls to follow in the steps of Jesus and the motto mentioned.

An hour in the morning was devoted to Bible study, which was interesting and instructive. The intellectual side was taken up by nature study and camp craft. The physical was carried on by swimming, hiking and morning exercises. The girls met in social activities all through the day, culminating in the big camp fire at night, where each and every girl took an active part in the evening entertainment. Skits, songs, plays, stories and recitations were part of the programme, while even a circus was put on Friday night. The group from each tent provided an act for this circus. This was most enjoyable, for some of the acts were really very clever, and one wondered where all the circus attire hailed from, and at the ability of these young people to meet any programme assigned to them.

On Saturday mornings, every one was busy taking down tents, packing luggage and "hunting up" lost articles. Every girl was rather downhearted to see the tents go down and camp break up, because everyone had such an enjoyable time. The sentiment and good spirit which prevails through a camp, run on such basis, cannot help but make the girls who attend, leave, feeling that they have learned something more and that there is something more to live for.

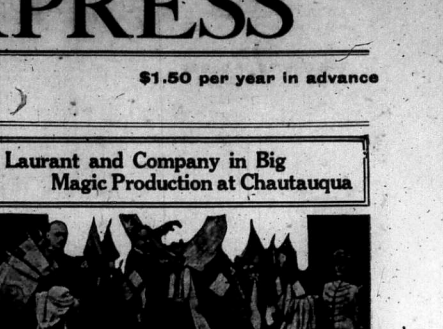
Laurant and Company in Big Magic Production at Chautauqua



An amazing, spectacular production of magic and mystery, with lavish stage settings and equipment, presented by the Great Laurant, magician and wonder-worker, and his notable company of assistants, will be one of the outstanding entertainment numbers of the coming Dominion Chautauqua.

Laurant has established an enviable record in his profession. People who have seen Kellar and Hermann the Great at their best declare that Laurant is quite their equal, and not a few pronounce him their superior.

Laurant employs the arts and ingenuity of both ancient and modern conjurers. Hindu magic, the craft of the ancient Chinese, together with modern illusions and fun, follow each other with startling rapidity.

LAYING THE CORNER STONE

Following the luncheon in the town hall, Bath, Wednesday last, to which over five hundred persons participating in the impressive ceremonies held Wednesday morning at the laying of the corner stone of St. John's church, sat down, addresses were delivered on the school lawn, from a platform erected for the occasion, to a very large number of people.

The first speaker of the afternoon's program was Rev. W. E. Kidd who represented St. George's Cathedral Parish. Mr. Kidd congratulated the parish of Bath and the rector on their efforts to rebuild their church, and called attention to the fact that the history of St. John's and that of the Cathedral of St. George's, were very similar in many respects. Both congregations were originally organized by United Empire Loyalists; both had suffered very heavy losses through fire; and the year 1925 saw St. John's commencing the work of re-construction while St. George's is making an effort to pay off a heavy building debt.

Mr. E. J. Sexsmith, M.P.P., was the next speaker and he also complimented and congratulated the rector and people of St. John's Church. Mr. Sexsmith spoke on the duties of "good citizenship," calling attention to the influence exerted in this connection by the church.

Rev. Canon Woodcock, Bishop's Commissary in the Diocese of Ontario, was the next speaker, who added still further words of congratulations and encouragement for the rector and people of St. John's in the great work they had undertaken.

Mr. Aylesworth, of Deseronto, was another speaker, who dealt with the history of the United Empire Loyalists settlements, paying a great tribute to the pioneer stock who did so much towards the development of the Dominion.

PRESENTED WITH A BELL

The last speaker on the afternoon's program was Rev. Rural Dean Coleman, of Napanee, who called attention to the fact that the parish of Napanee was founded by the first rector of St. John's, Bath, Rev. John Langhorne.

Dean Coleman presented St. John's Church, Bath, with a bell, the gift of the Napanee church. This bell was originally placed in the Napanee church in memory of Rev. F. L. Dibb, at one time rector of Bath, and later vicar of Napanee, and will hang in St. John's Church, Bath, on its completion.

A splendid programme of music was rendered during the afternoon by the Napanee Male Quartette, the proceedings, for which a great throng of people from all over the country gathered in the village, being concluded by the singing of "God Save the King."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY REV. C. G. TRUMBULL.
(Editor of The Sunday School Times).

THE EPISTLE OF JAMES

Sunday, Aug. 2—The Book of James.
Golden Text—"Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only."—James 1 : 22.

James seems to have been what we would call a "practical" man. His letter shows that he was deeply exercised that Christians should express their religion in a practical way.

But, being practical, James believed in going to the root of things; and he knew there was no such thing as right-living without right-believing. James, like all intelligent Christians, put faith in first place. There is no man so impractical as the one who puts results first. There can be no results without a cause. Results are always secondary. There can be no fruit without a root. James knew this, and he knew that the root of all right-living is faith. Good works are the fruit, and come second. So James, under the Holy Spirit's inspiration, wrote an epistle on faith, and showed, what sort of practical living must result from a practical faith.

Just because James deals so fully with good work as necessarily resulting from true faith some have mistakenly supposed that James put works ahead of faith, and that he wrote his Epistle to contradict Paul's great Epistle's on faith as the sole secret of salvation and Christian living. An open-minded reading of James' brief letter of life changes this hasty attitude to this mistaken idea. Another conclusive fact appears in the dates of Paul's and James's Epistles, as noted in the Scofield Reference Bible. James' letter was written long years before, so much so that it has been called "the First Epistle to Christians." Romans and Galatians, Paul's great messages on Justification by Faith, were not written until years afterward. It is obviously unjust therefore to think that James was writing against Paul. Moreover the Holy Spirit, who inspired both, never contradicts Himself.

The opening verses of the epistle declare what a blessing it is to have our faith tested, and exhort us, therefore, to "count it all joy when ye fall into divers testings (or temptations)." As some one has said, most of us count it joy when we fall out of trouble. But God tells us to rejoice when we fall in—even while we have no idea how we are going to be delivered. For every such experience, to the trusting child of God, is an opportunity to trust God more, and to watch Him prove His love and faithfulness. This, says James, builds up our faith, which is what God desires.

When we don't know what to do we are simply to ask God, and He will tell us, without chiding us for our ignorance, provided we really ask Him in whole-hearted, 100 per cent. faith "nothing wavering." Then follows one of the Bible's great passages on the failure and futility of unbelief:

For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord, [A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways.

We are to look to God in full faith because "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

If all that we have comes from God, and if He is unchangeably good and loving and faithful then our faith in Him need never waver.

Faith receives Christ as Saviour, we are born again by Him, who is the Word of God, and now we have the very Life of God and Power of God with us. Therefore, by faith, we are to do God's will. So James exhorts: 2 "But be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." If you are really trusting God in the unreserved faith which receives all that He offers and gives all that He asks, you will prove this by your doing—for you will be supernaturally enabled to do.

In his second chapter James enlarges on this practical side of the faith-life by insisting that "faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Faith is never "alone"; it always expresses itself in some living, practical way.

Abraham, the father of the faithful, did something with his faith, says James. God had given Abraham His word that from Isaac should come a great nation. Then God asked Abraham to offer up Isaac as a sacrifice. Abraham's faith in God was so unwavering that he went ahead to offer Isaac—he believed that God would raise Isaac from the dead if necessary. That was proving faith by works, says James. If your faith in God does not result in real works, do not flatter yourself that you have a living faith, for "faith without works is dead."

All through the Epistle of James we are given practical injunctions on how to live a life pleasing to God, thus showing our faith by the works which do His will. Some of these are: Enduring temptation (1:12); being swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath (1:19); bridling the tongue (1:26; 3:1-13); treating poor and rich with equal love and honor (2:1-9); abstaining from self-seeking pride (4:1-6); fearing unrighteous riches (5:1-6); trusting God for healing when the direction to claim this with "the prayer of faith" (5:14-18).

On this last point, that of healing in answer to prayer, the fact that James connects it with faithprayers of Elijah which stopped rain for three years, and then brought rain again, indicates that "the prayer of faith" for healing is a distinct and extraordinary gift from God, to be used only when God so directs, as Elijah's guidance was distinct and extraordinary. To recognize this and the other teachings of the Scriptures as to the blessings of illness, the use of means, and the right use of faith and prayer, will save us from much of the confusion and misunderstanding on this subject so often occuring today.

Faubel Entertainers Are Delightful Chautauqua Feature

The Faubel Entertainers, who will appear here at the coming Dominion Chautauqua, have established a record for popularity which has spread from coast to coast. They are annually diversified novelty entertainments to the keen delight of audiences everywhere.

Clarence Faubel, who heads the company, is a gifted platform entertainer. His character portrayals are clear cut and versatile, ranging from the intensity of his dramatic interpretations to the robust humor of his rural dialect characterizations. His impersonative "fiddle" numbers are always a pleasing program feature.

Associated with Mr. Faubel in the company are Mrs. Faubel, talented violinist, pianist and impersonator, and Miss Marie Williamson, whose specialty solo numbers on the piano-accordion contribute greatly to the enjoyment of the program.

The Faubel Entertainers are sure of a hearty welcome wherever their sparkling program is given.

IMPLEMENTS COST LESS

In regard to the implements of production, which constitute the capital required for the development of our resources, the government has helped to make it possible for persons going into these businesses to obtain the capital necessary for the carrying on of their activities at a lower cost than obtained before. The importance of this legislation cannot be over-estimated and the administration deserves both praise and thanks.

When capital requirement is lessened the cost of production is decreased, and it stands to reason that the whole industrial life of the country must, as a consequence, be materially prospered. All manufacturing is based on the cost of raw material. All manufacturing depends on the raw material supplied by one of the four great basic industries, agriculture, mining, lumbering and fishing.

If the cost of raw material can be reduced in these industries, then every manufacturing concern in the Dominion will stand to gain, because when you reduce the cost of raw material there can follow a lowering in the price of the commodity produced, and that without any loss in either profits or in wages.

In this country we are trying to maintain a certain standard of labor and we do not want that standard lowered. On the other hand we have to go into a market and compete with other countries in foreign trade that have standards of labor lower than our own. If we can reduce the cost of raw materials entering into our manufacturers, be the amount ever so little, it may be just sufficient to give our manufacturers a chance to successfully compete in that foreign market against the other countries of the world.

The government has endeavored to bring about a situation advantageous alike to manufacturers and workers. Because of our trade warfare have been made less costly. Production should increase, trade should expand—as it is doing now—rapidly, and general prosperity result. The government is, and has been working along right lines, and their efforts should find grateful recognition when the time comes to show it.

Only Wings Necessary.

A hundred and twenty years ago people were evidently inclined to make greater demands upon their "help" than they are to-day. The following advertisement was clipped from "Farmer's Museum," published in 1795. "Wanted a sober family, a man of light weight, who fears the Lord and can drive a pair of horses. He must occasionally wait at table, join in the household prayer, look after horses and read a chapter in the Bible. He must, God willing, rise at seven in the morning, and obey his master and mistress in all lawful commands; if he can dress hair, sing psalms and play at cribbage, the more agreeable. N.B.—He must not be flattered with the maid servants, lest the flesh should rebel against the spirit and he should be inticed to walk in the thorny paths of the wicked. Wages 5½ guineas a year (about $7 a month."

Leather.

Leather was very early known in Egypt and Greece, and the thongs of manufactured hides were used for ropes and harnesses by all ancient nations. A knowledge of tanning leather spread among all nations possessing any skill in the arts. A plan for making artificial leather out of cuttings was discovered in 1869.

THE IMMIGRATION PROBLEM

In dealing with the immigration problem the government has taken into consideration the fact that we have an enormous area. That portion due to the war is a sacred obligation which cannot be disavowed, a preferential obligation on the resources of the country. Such a liability is positive, unalterable, and cannot be repudiated. We are therefore forced to find new ways of raising revenue and these are of three kinds: the increase of our population; the development of our natural resources and production.

These three factors are so closely related to one another from an economic point of view that they cannot be separated. The development of our natural resources needs labor; to increase our production we need labor. But in order to avoid in-during our industries, increasing the number unemployed and burdening our economic life we must apply to immigration the principles embodied in the fiscal policy of the government. Human energy brought into this country must be regarded more or less as raw material. Our policy must have one aim, to cater to the ever-present needs of the development of our natural resources and super-production.

This immigration must be classified, grouped, selected mentally as well as physically, and especially must its absorption be provided for. This is done if the government has in view and if the problem is placed before the people for approval is a matter of course.

A scientific immigration policy will widen the area of taxation; make the burden more easily bearable and also aid in the solution of the transportation difficulty. It would seem as if Canada were in a favorable position today to obtain immigration of the right type, perhaps a little superior in some respects to many who have hitherto been coming to our shores. Be that as it may, we need the people and they should be made acquainted with the advantages and possibilities of the Dominion without exaggeration or over-stating the facts. The operation of the quota law in the United States gives us greater freedom of selection and this will undoubtedly be exercised.

An immigration policy on right lines, and the principles of scientific evolution and political economy regarding tariff reduction on raw materials will get rid of difficulties and hindrances to the development of our national life; still further reduce the cost of living; help producer and consumer alike and benefit everyone in the country.

Where He Kept It.

A social worker with more enthusiasm than tact went to call on Terence Shea, night-watchman, at his home.

"I trust, Mr. Shea," she said, "that you do not squander your money in liquor and riotous living. I'm trying to interest the people of the neighborhood in the new savings bank that has just started. May I ask what you do with your wages?"

"I'd just as soon tell ye as not," replied Mr. Shea. "Three pounds a week I earn. When I've paid the rent, the provisions, and the grocer's bill, and the milkman, and what's needed for Maggie and me folive children, I deposit the rest of the money in barrels, ma'am. I use sugar barrels mostly, ma'am, they're big and handy."

The Herbarium.

The Herbarium at London, Eng., contains nearly 4,000,000 specimens of dried plants, fruits, and seeds, and the library contains some 30,000 volumes. About 30,000 specimens are added to the Herbarium every year.

A Rare Watch.

A rare watch, which shows the day of the month and the phases of the moon, was sold in London for £12 10s. It was made for George III. by a Quaker, Daniel Quare.

Here and There

That a new market has been found for Canadian lobsters, is shown by the report that twenty-six hundred cases of lobsters, valued at about $78,000, were shipped to Sweden from Halifax, N.S., during the first week in July.

The gold mines of Northern Ontario are now realising aggregate profits of a million dollars a month, according to estimates compiled at Timmins, Ont. There was a gross income of $2,650,000 during the month of June.

Six hundred and twenty-four families from Great Britain and other European countries settled in the West on 187,000 acres of land, sold in the fiscal year ending May 31st, according to the records of the Canada Colonization Association.

Quebec is this year enjoying the greatest influx of tourists it has known for a considerable time. Hundreds of motorists, the majority from the States, are camped in and around the city, and the Chateau Frontenac reports capacity bookings.

During his tour of Western Canada Field Marshal Earl Haig passed through the town on the Canadian Pacific Railway which was named for him several years ago, for the first time. The Field Marshal, on learning his connection with the town, looked as pleased as though he had just won another famous victory.

According to the report of the Department of Agriculture, livestock marketings in Canada during the past year were the best experienced for many years. There were 975,020 cattle, 355,179 calves, 3,094,291 hogs and 485,606 sheep marketed in 1924, as compared with 882,921, 315,522, 2,383,402 and 512,890 respectively in the previous year.

According to J. M. Gibbon, secretary of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies, who recently left Montreal for the West, the annual crosscountry ride and pow-wow undertaken by that organization, is becoming so popular that lovers of the outdoors from England and Australia are attending this year, in addition to the members from the United States and Canada.

The "Beatty Boys," four British youngsters, brought out here by E. W. Beatty, K.C., President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to study Canadian farm methods, arrived in Canada on the "Montcalm" this month. They are expert farmers selected by the Minister of Agriculture from the members of the Young Farmers' Club of Great Britain and will remain in Canada for two months as the guests of Mr. Beatty.

That elk, in the Panther River country, not far from Banff, are rapidly increasing in number and may possibly become a menace, is the opinion of Belmore Brown, an artist of New York who recently returned from a painting tour through the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Brown is regarded as an authority on wild animals and states that there will be, ten years from now, 10,000 elk in the district, unless steps are taken to decrease their numbers.

French-Canadian agricultural experts, theologians, students and others, touring the country under the auspices of the University of Montreal express unanimous amazement at the agricultural development of British Columbia, the scenery of Alberta, the prairies of Manitoba, the beauties of Northern Ontario and the vastness of the country in general. A similar excursion left Toronto recently under the auspices of the Teachers' Federation of Canada also over Canadian Pacific lines, and will return the middle of August.

THE PEERAGE OF IRELAND.

No New Irish Peers Are to Be Created by the Crown.

The new order in Ireland has produced another change. Irish peers, as such, have had their claim to new Irish peerages are to be created by the crown and no more elections are to take place by the Irish peers to the former statutory quota of twenty-eight of their number to represent their order in the House of Lords.

When the Earl of Bandon, one of the representative peers of Ireland, died in May, 1924, his cousin and successor wisely abstained from making any attempt to secure election to his seat. The death of the Marquis of Curzon made another vacancy among the surviving representative peers of Ireland and it has been decided by crown and government now it shall not be filled. It has also been determined that no more Irish peerages shall be created by the British crown.

When something over two hundred years ago the union of Scotland and England was enacted the British crown was specially debarred by statute from creating any new Scottish peerages. And none have been created since. This union is still in existence and the Scottish peers, that is to say, the holders of Scottish peerages that were in existence prior to the beginning of the eighteenth century, assemble on the occasion of each Parliamentary general election in the royal palace of Holyrood to choose sixteen of their number to represent their order in the House of Lords at Westminister. Otherwise they have no representation in that chamber.

REAL SKILLED LABOR

It has been well said that the products of the Canadian farm are as much the result of skilled labor as the output of our factories and workshops. The point is frequently overlooked when the trade and commerce of the Dominion are being discussed, either in the House or out of it. But the Government is not oblivious of the fact, although the average city worker imagines that all the farmer has to do is to let nature do his work, while he reaps the increase.

The farmer's work is never done, and he, of all men in the world earns his bread on the principle of the Edenic law. Last year our total exports were valued at $1,045,000,000 and more than half these exports originated on Canadian farms. Thus from east to west, more than half the workers of the Dominion are employed in the cultivation of land and kindred activities.

The government is doing its share to improve and foster this great source of wealth and prosperity. In the Department of Agriculture there are some 1300 employees, including civil government, permanent and temporary, in fourteen branches, whose salaries in the aggregate amount to almost $200,000 a year. These staffs are engaged in general dairy work, extensions of markets, dealing with insects and other pests, production and sale of tobacco, the fruit industry, contagious diseases of animals, meat and canned goods, live stock and seed control. The heaviest item next to civil government is the meat and canned goods branch with 244 employees costing more than $38,211 per annum or thereabouts.

All this money is expended in an effort to make farming more and more a scientific undertaking and occupation. A great deal of good is being accomplished and results are likely to be much better as time goes on. Farmers, like other people, do not care too much for paternalism, too many prohibitory enactments, too many rules and regulations, but they live up to the letter and spirit of legislation when it is really beneficial to agriculture.

To succeed in any branch of farming needs application, skill, experience and uninterrupted energy, together with the use of the latest information and knowledge available. We hope the time is not far idstant when the Canadian farmer will find his reputation rising him on a more generous basis. The man who built up the country since pioneering days deserve well at the hands of every section of the public. Their encouragement and ultimate prosperity is the sure foundation of permanent well being, so far as Canada is concerned.

Wilderness to Blossom.

To speak of the Soudan, is to call up a vision of hooded Arabs, nettlesome steeds and sand, sand, sand, as far as the eye can reach. But while a few short years ago this might have been true—the Soudan is in the advanced stage of evolution. Irrigation is bringing into gorgeous fertility the Gezira Plain—a tract of country nearly as large as England, in the triangle behind Khartum formed by the convergence of the Blue and the White Nile. The transformation will cost $66,000,000. The land has been tested at experimental stations, and has proved to be among the most fertile in the world. Already 30,000 acres are under cotton. There are three million cultivatable acres of it—an area as large as the English midlands—and it is reckoned that one-tenth of this area—the 300,000 acres to be irrigated first—will produce forty million pounds of cotton in a year. Within a generation, it is estimated the output will be a million bales, worth at least $100,000,000. The Gezira will be one of the chief cotton-producing districts. Today the great Makwar Dam, 150 miles above Khartum, rapidly approaches completion, and a marvellous transformation is at hand. The dam is to be finished by mid-July of this year. It will have taken two and a half years to build, and will cost about $20,000,000. It is of pink granite, brought from the hill of Segadi, thirty-five miles away. An army of 19,000 men has been working at it day and night.

"I promised Matilda not to mention this to anyone, because she got it in strictest confidence from some one who was pledged to absolute secrecy, so before I tell you you must promise me your word of honor you won't even breathe a hint of it."

First Translation of Bible.

The first translation of any part of the Bible was that by Bede of the Fourth Gospel, in 735. The first complete translation was that of Wycliffe about 1388. Luther was not born until 1483.

Karkov Wheat.

Mr. W. H. Hunter has harvested a field of Karkov wheat that promises to give an exceptional yield. This variety, wherever tested in Eastern Ontario, has given very satisfactory results. Winter wheat is not extensively grown in this County, but it is possible that the Karkov variety might be grown with profit.

W. J. Bryan Dead.

Dayton, Tenn., July 27th.—William Jennings Bryan was discovered dead in bed here yesterday afternoon by servants. He had retired to his room in the early afternoon for a nap and was found dead at 4.30 o'clock. Heart disease was given as the cause of death. He was in the best of spirits and expressed himself as "feeling fine" when he retired shortly after lunch about 4.30 o'clock. He had attended services at the Southern Methodist Episcopal church here in the morning and had partaken of a hearty meal before retiring to his room. The Bryans were staying at the residence of Richard Rogers.

The Late Mrs. H. B. Sherwood.

Mrs. Hester Sherwood, beloved wife of Mr. H. B. Sherwood, passed away on Tuesday last at the residence of her son, Mr. Lumman Sherwood, Ottawa. Mrs. Sherwood had been in poor health for some time, and returned from New York some weeks ago, expecting to spend a short time in Ottawa before going to Mr. Sherwood's summer home at Odessa. The remains were brought to Napanee on Wednesday and the funeral took place from her late residence. Besides her husband, whose health is also not good, she leaves one son, Mr. Lumman Sherwood, Ottawa, and two daughters, Miss Leah Sherwood, of New York, and Mrs. J. B. Allison, Napanee.

The Late Mrs. Harry Johnston.

The many friends of Mrs. Harry Johnston were shocked to hear of her sudden death on Wednesday last. Mrs. Johnston had come to Napanee on Tuesday to meet a friend and was stricken at the railway station. She was taken to the home of Mrs. W. C. Scott where she passed away without regaining consciousness. The funeral was held from the home of her sister-in-law, Miss Edna Johnston, on Friday. Services were held in the Church of St. Mary Magdalene where a large number of friends and neighbors gathered to pay their last respects to a highly respected neighbor and friend, and a very active church worker. Besides her husband she leaves two daughters, Misses Mildred and Edith, her mother, Mrs. Brisco, and brother, Mr. Isaac Brisco.

Gananoque 2 ; Napanee 5.

A very snappy game of baseball was played in the Napanee Driving Park Wednesday afternoon. The crowd was small and those who did not attend missed the best game of the season. Napanee won the battle by the score of 5 to 3. R. Loucks pitched the nine innings for Napanee and turned in a wonderful game. The game was the first Loucks pitched this season. Cook for Gananoque started in the box, but was relieved by Kenny in the fourth. Both teams played splendid ball, especially the outfielders. The line-up was :

Napanee — Stewart, ss ; C. Fraser, 3b ; Johnston, 2b ; Hudgins, rf ; D. Fraser, lf ; Naphin, 1b ; Huffman, cf ; Scrimshaw, c ; Loucks, 6.

Gananoque — Mackenie, cf ; Loyd, ss ; Kenny, c ; Bantford, 1b ; O'Connor, 2b ; Hepperd, 3b ; Squire, rf ; Jacques, lf ; Cook, p.

Odessa Won From Newburgh.

The four-cornered tie in the Lennox and Addington League was broken Wednesday afternoon when Odessa won from the Newburgh team at Odessa by the tidy score of thirteen to two, and placed themselves out in front for the honors in that League. The winners cleaned up their runs in three innings, but while the getting was so free had they made it good and solid. At the same time their pitcher, V. Kilgannon, took good care that the Newburgh batters got but few hits, he, with the assistance of his team-mates shut out the visitors in seven of the nine innings, Newburgh scoring a run in each of the second and third innings. Kilgannon fanned nine of the Newburgh batters and Baron for Newburgh turned back eight of the Odessa players by the same route. There was a large crowd of fans present.

The score by innings :

Odessa .....670 020 04x—13
Newburgh .....011 000 000—2

The line-up was :

Odessa—B. Smith, rf ; McConnell, lf ; Kilgannon, p ; C. Smith, 2b ; Heath, ss ; Lee, 1b ; O'Neil, cf ; Cairns, c ; Burley, 3b.

Newburgh—R. Holland, cf ; Armstrong, 1b ; Reese, ss ; Conhouse, rf ; Gannon, lf ; Milligan, c ; Baron, p ; Williams, spare.

The Late George Sams.

The death is announced with deep regret of George Sams, of Bath, at 12.05 o'clock on Sunday morning, July 12th, 1925, in his 68th year. He had been ailing for over two years, but always being a very active man, he was always busy right up to the evening he died. He was as well as usual when he retired and had helped feed some of the calves and took care of the chickens at 6 and at midnight Mrs. Sams was awakened by him breathing hard and he passed away peacefully in a few minutes. Heart failure was the cause of death. He leaves a widow and one daughter, Mrs. Clarence Ruttan, and two sons, Arthur and Fred. His second Russell, died overseas in August, 1916. Mr. Sams was born in England 68 years ago and came to Canada when about 20 years of age, and has farmed ever since. The funeral was held at the home July 14th, at eleven o'clock, and was conducted by Rev. Mr. Ross, of Bath, assisted by Rev. Mr. Burgess, of Kingston and Rev. Mr. Swayne, of Bath. The remains were buried at Bath in the Methodist cemetery. The bereaved family have the sympathy of a large circle of friends. Mr. Sams was a member of the Methodist church.

The Chow Dog.

The chow dog is a diminutive breed of the Siberian sledge dog improved and developed in China, from where they began to be imported into Europe and America about the beginning of this century. These dogs have the coat and form of the sledge dogs and are very compact and sturdy of frame and lively in disposition. In color they are either all black, even to the tongue and inside of the mouth, or all white, blue, red or yellow. The chow made its first appearance in America at the Westminster kennel show, New York, in 1901.

FIRST SIGHT OF TELEPHONE.

How an Eskimo Tried Out Wonderful Invention.

North Pole exploration by airship again calls attention to the primitive Eskimo people who fringe the northern part of this continent. Doubtless some of them are familiar by now with radio and some have seen the telephone. A story of how one of them viewed the telephone when introduced to it by Donald MacMillan's expedition a few years ago is told by the Southwestern Telephone News:

As the warm sun of the short Northern summer melted the snow over the former camping-ground of a previous expedition, Mr. MacMillan discovered considerable debris, including some wire and one old telephone mouthpiece. His Eskimo companion showed intense interest in the white man's explanation of the use of the telephone. When the explorer turned in for a few hours' sleep the ingenious native tried his hand at telephone line construction.

Along the bleak Arctic coast ran a straggling row of split boards about five feet high, from which was festooned a couple of hundred yards of wire. A single telephone mouthpiece dangled at one end of the line, and before it stood a solitary Eskimo. Into this improvised telephone he shouted a few words in his native language, then ran madly along the pole line, clasped the far end of the wire to his ear, and listened for his own message. All he heard was the wind whistling over the ice-bound waters along the grim northwest coast of Greenland.

Disappointed, but still hopeful, the Eskimo returned to the mouthpiece. Evidently feeling that he had not sprinted quite fast enough the first time, he repeated the process with an extra burst of speed, only to be disappointed again. Just then there appeared around the corner of the hut the white explorer who had given him the scrap wire and the old mouthpiece. Immediately the Eskimo ceased his efforts, and laughingly remarked that he knew the white man was lying when he told about the telephone, for nobody could talk through a wire than had no hole in it!

Those who would laugh at the Eskimo, however, might read for their racial humbleness this story of a happening in a United States city:

The corpulent and excited individual had squeezed himself into a closed telephone booth on a hot day last summer. He was arguing vehemently with the operator, and was evidently getting the worst of the argument. "But," he cried, mopping his forehead with a red bandanna, "I know there is such a central office. Give me now my number without further talk. See, I have in my hand my friend's letter, and on his letterhead is his telephone number. There must be such an exchange. Give me "Established one-eight-nine-five!"

LONDON A CENTURY AGO.

Great Changes Have Taken Place Since George IV.'s Time.

What was England like a century ago?

George IV., "The First Gentleman in Europe," was on the throne, Lord Liverpool was Premier, and had been since 1812. His Ministry was destined to survive until 1828. After the long fever of the Napoleonic wars, the times were tranquil. Trade and agriculture were reviving, and taxation was not oppressive.

As to the social life of the period, here is a miniature of the London of a hundred years ago:

"Streets after dark blinked with the aid of oil lamps. A machine called a hackney coach, licensed to carry six people, redolent of damp straw, driven by a still damper coachman, was the principal mode of locomotion. Omnibuses were unknown.

"Those stalwart figures in blue that are now to be seen lounging gracefully by area steps were still embedded in the brain of Sir Robert Peel. Officers, called Bow-street runners, were supposed to catch thieves, with whom, in their convivial hours, they associated."

The day of railways was not yet. You travelled by mail coach or, supposing you were in a hurry or on your way to Gretna Green, by post chaise.

Perhaps the greatest contrast between then and now was in the punishment of crime. In the years of grace 1824 a boy was hanged for setting fire to a cornstack. It was a brutal criminal code, which prescribed capital punishment for almost everything, from murder to petty larceny. But in practice it was not quite so brutal as it seemed. With a population of less than 12,000,000 in England and Wales, over a thousand were sentenced to death in 1824, but only 98 were executed.

Night life in London a century ago differed in one essential from that of the present time. Licensing hours had not been thought of, and places of entertainment remained open as long as they found it profitable. Night clubs were plentiful, among the most famous being Evan's, the Coal Hole, the Cider Cellars and Offey's. There were professional male singers and general choruses, and excellent meat and drink.

It was a time of high play. Clubs such as Crockford's and Booth's and White's existed for little else, but the common people were equally well catered for. At the Quadrand end of Regent street every other house was devoted to open and public gambling.

Sailors' Sixth Sense.

That amazing "sixth" sense which enabled forty-four men to navigate two small boats for nearly 2,000 miles over the Atlantic is something few landsmen appreciate.

Sea instinct is a reality. A sailor can feel his ship under him like a living thing. He knows its mood, even when he is asleep in his bunk. He can tell by the feel of the deck under his feet if the cargo is stowed properly and the weight equally distributed.

He may not be an expert stevedore, and he knows nothing about metacentric height, but he has an instinct for these things.

Another important factor in the sailor's sixth sense is the smell of a vessel. As soon as he goes on board he can tell by her smell whether she is a good or a bad ship. But he cannot describe the difference in these smells.

Although all the complicated navigation instruments of the modern liner threaten to kill this sixth sense, the sailor still retains his strange sensitiveness, and when he retires from his hard profession the old salt becomes a human barometer and can foretell the approach of wind, rain or snow long before the meteorological office knows anything about them.

For the life he leads the sailor has to be made of very tough stuff, but underneath his rough hide he always remains a child of nature, a strangely sentient creature, with the warmest and most responsive heart in the world.

ANIMALS SACRED AND UNCLEAN.

In India the Owl, the Donkey, and the Dog Are All Unclean.

A serious riot that took place recently in a suburb of Calcutta was, it seems, caused by the discovery of a dead pig in the court-yard of a mosque.

Believing their Hindu neighbors to be responsible, the local Moslems attacked them, killing one and wounding five.

This is not the first time that a pig has caused bloodshed in the East. To the Moslem the pig is "the unclean thing," and its proximity is pollution, just as, to the Hindu, the cow is sacred and its slaughter is the worst of crimes.

Perhaps are the two best-known cases of animals entering into the religious codes of Eastern peoples and the two in which strong feelings are most quickly roused. But there are others which less often come before the public eye.

In India the owl, the donkey, and the dog are all unclean. Only a sweeper will look after a dog, and donkeys are used only by washer-women—a caste despised.

The term "Owl" as an epithet applied to an Indian does not, as in Europe, impute stupidity. It imputes impurity in the religious sense, which is regarded as a failing far more grave.

To Hindus the brown monkey is sacred, probably because he helped Ram Chandar, one of the chief heroes of Hindu folk-lore, to rescue his bride, imprisoned by demons in Ceylon.

The grey, black-faced ape, on the other hand, is an object of no veneration, his face having been blackened, it is said, by refusing to join the rescue party.

The ruddy sheldrake, or "Brahmani" duck, to give it the name by which it is known all over India, is a sacred bird, regarded by Hindus as the living embodiment of constancy in love.

According to Hindu legend, sheldrake are human lovers changed to birds and allowed to be altogether by day, but condemned to spend their nights apart, calling to one another disconsolately from opposing banks of streams.

The peacock is yet another sacred bird. The shooting of jungle-fowl by British soldiers near Hindu villages has often led to brawls.

BRITAIN'S WILD ANIMALS.

Few Animals That Man Cannot Domesticate.

There are still wild cats in the Highlands, for the writer saw one that had been killed by a keeper in Inverness. The British wild cat is absolutely tameless, and its kittens, even when brought up in captivity, remain as wild and shy as the parent.

There are few animals that man cannot domesticate if he has sufficient patience. It used to be supposed that the African elephant could not be handled, and the same was said of the zebra. Yet both these creatures have been turned into beasts of burden.

The African wild dog is, however, quite untamable. It is a curious-looking beast, and in its wild state an amazing hunter. When in packs it is dangerous, and experienced hunters leave it alone.

A wolf can be tamed. Even the big savage timber wolf, if caught young, becomes as passive as a dog. But that queer wolf-like animal known as the Tasmanian devil refuses to respond to treatment. It is always wild and savage, and usually dies if kept in captivity. It is one of the ugliest creatures alive. The great cats, such as the lion and tiger, can be tamed; so can the South African lynx and the South American panther.

But the black jaguar, one of the most dangerous of wild beasts, always remains savage and treacherous, and even when caught as a kitten refuses to have anything to do with mankind. The ordinary leopard can be tamed if caught young enough, but is liable to revert suddenly to savagery, and the same may be said of the bob-cat, the North American lynx.

Another North American animal which has an evil reputation is the wolverene. It is dreaded by the trapper, for it will force its way into a shanty and destroy the stores.

GREER'S MAIL BAG

By ERWIN GREER
(President Greer College of Automotive Engineering, Chicago)

Why is it that people always want to kid an automotive expert? Here I am trying to answer my morning's mail intelligently and said mail is chock-full of wise cracks. Maybe some of this material will give you a laugh—maybe you're one of the folks that is kidding me. But now I shall kid you.

J. N.—That awful rumbling in your car, John? Why that is probably the truck you ate for dinner.

M.L.G.—Who is the safest automobile driver? I should say the chap who has his wife along. He always keeps his eyes on the road.

Adv.—To employ young lady for few hours, who can drive Ford car. Must be reasonable. Box 642, S. M., Outlook.

What is the first thing to learn about running a new car, Reginald? The telephone number of the nearest garage, I should say. Here lies the body of John H. Black.

Whose car went dead on the railroad track.
And when the engine gave it a jar.
John H. went "dead" with the rest of the car.

"We're going to have a big Knight ahead of us," said the girl as her sweetie's flivver swung in behind the Steams.

M. J. P.—Yes, Willie, in washing your car you should use clear water, rags and a clean brand of cuss words.

T.K.S.—Oversied pistons do sometimes slap. Try adjusting the windshield. If that fails, throw out the clutch.

Who said Fords are lazy because they are shiftless?

J.P.D.—Hamilton one per mile.

Water Jacket—An engine's one piece bathing suit.

J.H.—Quick term, but Latin to most of us. Meaning about 8300 more than the list price.

Franklins don't need motormeters.

Misses in a motor mean trouble (This tip exclusively for the married men.)

Charging rate—Used by garage men and based on the amount of yelling one does.

Greer's cross word puzzle: A four letter word meaning pile of junk.

If you can smile as gasoline goes higher
And sing a song because your motor dies,
Your piece is not with common, erring mortals—
But up there somewhere in the skies.

Britain's Earliest Admiral.

Sir Ronald Storrs, Governor of Jerusalem, recently appealed to the Governor of the Channel Islands for funds to safeguard the only Crusader's tomb left in Jerusalem. The tomb is that of Philip Daubeney, formerly Governor of the Channel Islands, who died in 1236.

During the war this tomb was seen by thousands of Britishers, but few of them can have realized that they were gazing at the last resting-place of the first of that long line of admirals which made Britain the Mistress of the Seas. For Philip Daubeney was the man who commanded the fleet which won our first great naval victory.

The battle was fought against the French, who then had an army operating in England. The fleet which Daubeney destroyed was bringing reinforcements to this force. The engagement seems to have been a strenuous one. At one stage, according to an old historian, Daubeney caused hot lime-dust to be thrown into the sea, which blinded the eyes of the French." The weapons of to-day are different, but the spirit of our seamen is the same.

The Jew's Joke.

A Jew with teothache consulted a dentist, who advised him to have the tooth out.

"Can't have it out—vy, I couldn't stand the pain."

"I'll give you gas—you'd never feel the pain."

The Jew asked: "Then I'll be asleep—unconscious—and you'll get this tooth out?"

"Yes!"

The Jew took all the money out of his pocket.

"Don't trouble to pay me now," said the dentist.

"I'll come to, to," said the Jew. "I vant to count my money before I go to sleep."

Losing Our Teeth.

The effect of haste in eating is thus described by P. D. Poston in the Washington Post:

"In the National Museum at Washington are the skulls of about two hundred Indians who lived several hundred years ago. But one tooth out of the entire lot (over six thousand) shows any decay. To-day, it would be difficult to find one person in two hundred with sound teeth.

"Another examples Until recent years the Bushman had perfect teeth, because they ate only natural, coarse foods which they vigorously chewed. Toothache was unknown. Now, the younger generation, living along the coasts and rivers where our food factories supply them with soft food in cans and boxes from which the minerals and vitamins have been removed, requiring no chewing, are confronted with the wholesale rotting away of their teeth, just as are our children here in the States. Late reports show that the health and lives of over 10,000,000 of our children are seriously impaired because of widespread decay of their teeth.

"In this nervous, restless, speedy age, mastication of food is almost unknown. It is simply not convenient. Wherever you go, with rich and poor, old and young, they're all playing the same crude game of killing time of cramming it in and washing it down—anything just to shove food into the stomach and hurry on somewhere, anywhere, or nowhere.

"Go to lunch room or restaurant. One man has a jaw full of sandwich that is being washed down with coffee; a hunk of pie awaits a similar fate. Another is tossing down a glass of milk which should be sipped for five minutes. Still another is shovelling in a whole dinner in a ten-minute period, while forty minutes is needed properly to dispose of it."

A Modern Babel.

Cairo, which those who use its telephones know as the modern city of Babel, is to have an automatic telephone system. A British firm has secured the contract for its installation, which is to cost £60,000.

The advantage of the change will be felt principally by those telephone users who are not good linguists. Cairo is one of the most polyglot of places, and getting a call through in that city is a heart-breaking job to the man who knows no language but his own.

Most Britishers who have lived long in the East have acquired the gift of tongues, however. They will ask for the number they want in Italian, change over to Arabic when the call comes through, then exchange a few words with a secretary in French, and only drop back into English when at last they get the man they want.

If you aren't a linguist, and ask for the number you want in English, you are usually told that the number is engaged. It is so much simpler for the operator than trying to understand what you mean.

Rather wearing, all this, even for the linguists. So everyone will welcome the change to an automatic exchange.

The Potato on Trial.

It took people a hundred years to discover that potatoes were good to eat.

In 1728 an attempt was made to introduce potatoes into Scotland, but they were denounced from the pulpit on two contradictory counts — that they were not mentioned in the Bible, and, therefore, were not fit food for Christians, and that they were the forbidden fruit, the cause of Adam's fall. They were accused of causing leprosy and fever.

British Babies Best.

"British babies are the finest in the world," says Sir James Cantlie, the famous doctor, who also states that the girls of the present day are taller than their mothers.

Banyan Trees and Fig Wasps.

The noblest and most imposing tree in the Hawaiian Islands is the banyan. These trees do not produce seeds. Its propagation is dependent upon one of the tiniest of insects, the fig-wasp. The trees introduced into Hawaii, from Australia, China and India, are not propagated in the territory of Hawaii in that manner, and the tiny insects necessary to the productio not mature fruit and seeds are not present there. The fig wasp goes into the figs for selfish purposes only. She is hunting for a place to rear her babies, and the only place that suits her are the female flowers inside the figs. She puts an egg in each flower which she selects, and in doing so, crawling about, pollinates the other female flowers with grains of pollen which were adhering to her body from the older fig where she herself had grown to maturity. The figs do not mature without the agency of the fig wasps, and the latter can not develop or exist without the presence of the figs in the proper condition for them. Numerous kinds of figs and fig wasps are native to-day in many tropical countries, each having its own kind of minute insects called fig wasps to assist in seed production.

Jugo-Slav Tamburica Orchestra Unique Chautauqua Feature

The widely popular Jugo-Slav Tamburica Orchestra will be a delightful feature of the coming Dominion Chautauqua here. The music of Jugo-Slavia finds expression through a unique instrumentation. The national instrument is the small and delicate tamburica upon which the tones of the cornet, clarinet, flute and oboe are beautifully simulated. In the orchestra which will be heard here the tamburica will have a premier place. The one large instrument used is an oddly constructed bass viol which is plucked with the fingers. Selections ranging from overtures from great operas to light popular numbers played by this novel orchestra are replete with mellow and resonant loveliness.

"Loved and Lost"

By

BERTHA M. CLAY

Author of "A Sinful Secret," "A Golden Heart," "Lover and Husband," "A Gypsy's Daughter," Etc.

A gleam of fierce scorn came into Norah's violet eyes, and then flashed out again, leaving them dim as with unshed tears.

"Whatever I might have cared for I am not likely to get."

Her tone was sad, her face so wistful, Colonel Dacre forgot her bad accent, and said with earnest sympathy,

"Anyhow, don't make a mull of your life, Norah, in a fit of the blues. There is no reason why you shouldn't be happy."

"None whatever," she replied, with a forced laugh.

"Then it is true about the Russian prince?"

"Come, Lawrence, you have quite enough to do to attend to your domestic duties," she retorted tartly. "Go home and show that letter to your wife—and—don't meddle in my affairs. No man can serve two masters, you know."

"Still, I think he might serve his friend without being in the least degree false to his wife."

"Perhaps, I really don't know—but I fancy the interest of the two would clash occasionally. However, I am not going to try the experiment. But your wife will be wondering what has become of you. Good-by, Lawrence;" and she held out her hand to him with a softened air, "I should like you to tell Lady Gwendolyn from me, if you thought she would care for the confession, that I am very sorry to have misjudged her."

"I know she will be pleased to hear that you have found out your mistake."

"Then tell her by all means, and good-by once more."

He kissed her hand affectionately, and was moving toward the door, when she called him back to say, with a flash of her old humor:

"A fellow met at Nice told me that ere long there might be an heir to Borton Hall. Is it true?"

"Tell me about the Russian prince first. Is that true?"

"Yes," she said, hanging her head a little.

"So is the other, then."

She nodded to him benevolently, but there were tears still in her eyes, and he seemed to see only them as he turned for the last time. Was the old friend's widow ere she disappeared out of his life forever.

Lady Gwendolyn was reading in the salon as her husband entered, but, instead of greeting him with a smile, according to her wont, she went on with her paper, and did not even glance his way. He glided behind her, placed his hands round her slender throat, and drew her head back on his breast.

"Well, Gwen?" he said, trying to look into her eyes. "What is it, my love?"

"Nothing," she answered, with an air of assumed indifference. "I had a bad headache this morning."

"No wonder, as you cried yourself to sleep."

She started violently.

"How do you know?"

"Through my eyes and my ears, Gwen."

She lowered her long lashes, and her lips quivered.

"Well," he added presently, "I am waiting to know what all this means."

"It is nothing of the least consequence."

"Pardon me, Gwen, anything that causes you tears must be of the greatest possible consequence to me."

"Oh! women cry for nothing, you know."

"Some may, but you do not, Gwen. I have not seen a tear in your eye, until last night, ever since our marriage."

"I was so happy," she sighed.

"And you mean to infer that you are no longer so?"

She was silent.

He sat beside her on the couch, and put his arm about her waist.

"Gwen," he said, very gravely, "we are husband and wife now, and a difference between us would be a terrible thing. Lovers' quarrels are light things, and do to laugh over afterward; but if you are angry with me, Gwen, it can be no laughable matter. I have too much faith in your love to believe that you would be angry for nothing, and condemn me unheard, especially as you promised on our wedding-day that you would never keep anything from me."

"Have you kept all your promises?" she asked, half sadly, half resentfully.

"I hope so, Gwen. If not, you have only to remind me how and when I have failed to find me eager to atone."

"You promised," she sobbed out, "to uphold me always."

"And have I not done so?"

"No."

"Do speak out, Gwen; you are torturing me," he complained. "To be accused of a want of loyalty to my wife and not to be able to defend myself at once is terrible. What do you mean?"

"You spoke to Mrs. O'Hara yesterday, although you know her to be my enemy, and I am sure you have been to see her this morning," she went on, out, at last, half ashamed, half afraid, and yet resolute withal.

"That is perfectly true as far as it goes," replied Colonel Dacre gravely. "I did speak to Mrs. O'Hara yesterday; it would have been very difficult to pass a woman I had known so many years without some sign of recognition; I also went to call upon her this morning, at her special request."

Then he briefly gave her a summary of his interview with Norah, and laid the letter George Belmont had written to Miss Pindar in Lady Gwendolyn's lap.

"Read that," he said, rather coldly. "You seem so ready to suspect me, Gwen, I am glad to be able to give you proofs that I am not deceiving you."

"Oh, Lawrence!" she said reproachfully; and she had an impulse to put back the letter, saying she required no confirmation of his words, but curiously checked the generous movement, and she opened and read it instead.

Her face lightened as she perused these lines, which seemed almost like a message from the grave, and when she had finished she said eagerly:

"Why did Miss Pindar produce this letter before?"

"Because she knew nothing of the post-mortem examination, and the suspicious circumstance of his death. She lives in a quiet country place, and seldom sees a newspaper; and when Mrs. O'Hara wrote to say that her brother was dead, Miss Pindar was thankful to let well alone—even tried to persuade herself that he had died by the visitation of God, after all, and not by his own hand."

"But Mrs. O'Hara knew that I had been unjustly suspected, and should have taken care to exonerate me as quickly as possible."

"She has only had the letter in her possession for a month, she told me, and did not know of its existence before. She said she meant to send it to Borton Hall directly she heard of our return there; but our chance meeting yesterday has saved her the trouble."

"And where is she going now?"

"Well, she is going to be married —if that is an answer to your question."

"To whom?" inquired Lady Gwendolyn, her eyes sparkling. "Any one I know?"

"That I can't tell you; but it is a Russian prince."

"Nonsense, Lawrence!" exclaimed his wife, melting altogether now, although the news seemed too good to be true. "It isn't, really, the least possible thing."

"It is the improbable things that always come to pass, I find."

"I suppose she is going abroad?" said Lady Gwendolyn, with a great affectation of carelessness.

"I dare say."

"Don't you mind?" she asked, drawing quite close to him and speaking coaxingly.

"Why should I mind?"

"You are such old friends."

"Exactly. But, you see, I shall have to cut all my old friends now, as no one's wife can stand it into her head to be jealous of them."

"Oh, Lawrence!"

"It is true, Gwen!"

"Not quite," she answered, with sudden candor. "I have never been jealous of any one but Mrs. O'Hara."

"And why of her, Gwen?" We were both free such months back, and if we had cared for each other, what need have hindered our marriage?"

Lady Gwendolyn hung her head.

"I never thought about that."

"No; my wife took a foolish fancy into her head, and, instead of doing her best to make me happy, set to work to take quiet possession of all her thoughts. The consequence was that I could not shake hands civilly with an old friend without being supposed to care more for her than the woman I had sworn to love and cherish before Heaven. Confess that you have been very absurd, Gwen."

"I am afraid I have, Lawrence," she answered penitently, as she nestled close to him and laid her head on his shoulder. "But you may be sure I shall trust you for the future, for my own sake. I have suffered dreadfully since yesterday afternoon."

"I know that, and you deserve a severe snubbing; only I am so weak where you are concerned, that, if I began to scold, I should end ignominiously by caressing you, I fancy."

"And what a nice end that would be!"

Lawrence was only a man, and his wife was very fair; so that we may be sure he readily responded to this naive invitation. But he had a mind to improve the occasion before he let the subject drop; so he gave her a little lecture on the terrible result of any want of confidence between husband and wife; and she was so glad to be scolded now that she not only promised all he required, but even forgot to remind him that he did not always practice what he preached.

But the Borton mystery had almost faded from her mind by this time, and, moreover, she thought it better to "let sleeping dogs lie."

That was a happy evening, and one Lady Gwendolyn often looked back upon with longing afterward. They had tickets for the Opera Comique, but decided at the last moment that they should be much happier at home; and, dismissing the carriage, drew their chairs to the log fire, and chatted merrily until bedtime.

Lady Gwendolyn did not cry herself to sleep that night, nor was she troubled by any evil presentment of coming trouble. As she seemed tired, Colonel Dacre was careful not to rouse her when he went to his dressing-room. But half an hour later he came hurriedly back, with an open letter in his hand.

"Gwen, darling," he said, "I am so very sorry, but I must go to England directly upon urgent business. The hurried journey would be too much for you, even if I were able to wait until you got ready; but I shall not be away more than three or four days, and I am sure you will not mind being such a short time alone."

He looked so troubled and anxious that she said at once:

"I am afraid there is something serious the matter that you will not tell me."

"My uncle, Sir Lawrence, is dead!"

"Is that all?" an inward voice prompted her to say.

He colored faintly, and a little spasm of pain contracted his firm lips as he answered:

"Isn't that enough, Gwen? However, I must not stand talking here. I have only just time to catch the boat-train."

He took leave of her hurriedly, but very tenderly, promising to write to her from Paris, where he caught up the travelling-bag he had been filling as he talked, and hurried away; turning back at the door to bid her husband loving glance and smile.

No sooner had she heard his carce drive off than she jumped out of bed with almost a guilty air, and, picking up a telegram she had seen drop out of his pocket, read the following words:

"Come the moment you receive this. There will be an expose if not, as she is very violent and fearless. She says she writes to find her husband, and we have only been able to keep her quiet by promising that she should see you to-night."

Was her husband indeed lost to her?

CHAPTER XXI.

Fear.

Lady Gwendolyn was so stunned by what she had seen, that for full ten minutes she stood in the centre of the room, with the paper in her hand, not as yet realizing the misfortune that had befallen her, and yet with a dead weight at her heart, and such a sense of bitter loss and desecration, that she felt as if it would be a blessed thing to die.

Her husband had left her with a kiss, and yet all these months he had been living a lie. And living it boldly, although he must have known that Norah had left Borton Hall for God, after all, and not by his own hand."

"But Mrs. O'Hara knew that I had been unjustly suspected, and should have taken care to exonerate me as quickly as possible."

"She has only had the letter in her possession for a month, she told me, and did not know of its existence before. She said she meant to send it to Borton Hall directly she heard of our return there; but our chance meeting yesterday has saved her the trouble."

I took all kinds of medicine, but found it stable Compound to be the only one that has helped me for any length of time. I recommend it to any one with troubles like mine and you may use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. ROBERT MCCULLEY, Port Greville, Nova Scotia.

Many mothers in this condition would find Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a blessing.

Champlain Memorial Marks Advent of White Race

April 24, 1615, was a great day in the lives of the townsfolk of the little seaport of Honfleur in Northern France, for on that day, Sieur Samuel Champlain, whose earlier voyages and discoveries in the New World had stirred the imagination of the French Court and of the merchants of the Norman and Breton seaports, set sail in the little ship, the St. Etienne, with a party of four Recollet brothers to Christianize the Indians. After a stormy voyage the little ship sailed up the St. Lawrence to that natural citadel, now the city of Quebec. Later Champlain went on to Montreal, where he found a large band of Indians assembled to meet him, reminding him of his promise to assist them in their wars. Realizing that this would lead to exploration and eventually to colonization, he set off to Quebec to make arrangements for the Indians sending out their scouts. Before he returned from Quebec, the Indians growing impatient set out with Father Le Caron and twelve Frenchmen into what is now the Province of Ontario. Champlain, with two Frenchmen and ten Indians started up the Ottawa to the Nattawa, and joined with the Hurons in a war expedition against the fierce Iroquois, by means of which Champlain, who was as enthusiastic an explorer as a soldier, discovered Lake Ontario. Returning from the wars, Champlain spent Christmas, 1615, with his friend, Chief Darontal at Cahiague, near where now stands the town of Orillia on Lake Simcoe. The gallant Frenchman returned to Montreal in June, 1616, where he found his friends, the Recollets, had given up hope of seeing him again. Champlain's work as an explorer was now done, but his voyages into Ontario opened up the path to the west to the missionary and the trader.

It is fair cry from this little ship, St. Etienne, which set sail that day so long ago from France, up the St. Lawrence to Quebec, to the giant Canadian Pacific steamship, "Montroyal," which one hundred and ten years later sailed from Cherbourg by the same route to the Canadian Gibraltar. On board the "Montroyal" was Vernon March, the famous British sculptor who designed and executed the monument recently erected at Orillia, to the memory of the gallant soldier, missionary and explorer, Samuel de Champlain, near the site of Cahiague, from which little settlement, Champlain started out with his Indian friends on the disastrous expedition against the Iroquois and where he returned with his discouraged allies.

The bronzes for the monument are colossal in size, the figure of Champlain himself being twelve feet high, of abounding action and vigor. In addition to this main figure are two groups, one, "Christianity" representing a Recollet father holding aloft the Crucifix to the savages (No. 1.) The other is "Commerce" and shows the voyageur with a similar pair of Indians (No. 3.) The total weight of the bronzes is more than nine tons. It is mounted on a pedestal of Benedict stone, 30 feet square and 18 feet high, giving the monument a total height of 30 feet (No. 2.)

Vernon March (No. 4), the sculptor, is an interesting figure. He is one of a family of seven brothers and one sister, all of whom are artists and sculptors. At their studio and workshop, in Farnborough, Kent, which formerly was an old post house, they do their own casting as well as designing. Mr. Vernon March's work, particularly that for war memorials, has won the highest competition in all parts of the Empire and the memorial at Orillia in both conception and execution is one of the finest examples of his art. Mr. Sidney March, a younger brother, crossed on the "Montroyal," and will assist his brother in the erection of the bronzes.

The late Lord Strathcona was one of the original promoters of the monument and made the initial contribution to the fund, while the Canadian Pacific Railway also copributed to the erection of the monument.

TO PRESERVE THE EGG

MAY BE KEPT FRESH WITHOUT COLD STORAGE.

Water Glass and Lime Water May Be Used—When to Preserve—Packing—Don't Feed Carcases to Live Stock.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

A household economy well worth while may be practiced by all housewives during the period when eggs are most abundant and cheap. The high prices generally ruling during the period October to March puts the extensive use of new laid eggs beyond the reach of people with limited incomes. However, all may have eggs for winter use by putting down a few dozen in a suitable preservative medium, and thereby supplying the need during the period of scarcity. It does not pay to put down more than enough to tide over the period of high prices.

Water Glass or Sodium Silicate.

Water Glass or Sodium Silicate is one of the most useful substances that can be used in preparing a suitable medium for preserving eggs in good condition for all household purposes. It is a pale yellow, odorless syrupy liquid that may be purchased at drug or grocery stores. The proper proportion is one part of water glass to ten parts of water. (Use water that has been boiled and cooled). Should the eggs float, and they are known to be absolutely fresh, add a little more water.

Lime Water.

This is a very successful preservative medium, easily prepared by slaking three pounds of good lump lime in a small amount of water, then add the milk of lime thus formed to three gallons of water. One-quarter pound of salt may be added. Keep the mixture well stirred for the day and then allow to settle. Pour off and use the clear liquid only. Put the eggs into the clear liquid and store in a cool place, using as needed.

Time to Preserve Eggs.

During April and early May eggs are usually cheapest, and it also happens that the best quality eggs are produced in the spring. Spring laid eggs keep better than summer or autumn laid eggs.

What to Preserve.

Only the absolutely fresh, clean, unwashed, sound-shelled eggs will keep. If you have to buy eggs for preserving it is advisable to candle them before putting them down, unless you have absolute confidence in the person supplying them. Any egg that floats should be discarded. Eggs with shrunken contents, cracked shells, watery content or dirty shells if put in the preservative will be useless when they come out, and they will also spoil everything that they touch while in the preservative.

Suitable Containers.

Earthenware, or glass crocks, wooden tubs or casks may be used. Avoid metal containers. A vessel of six iron size will hold 3 dozen eggs, usually enough for a family.

Whatever is used it must be clean and sweet, as it will quickly take up any taint. Better scald vessel before the eggs go in.

Packing.

Place the eggs in the vessel, small end down, and pour the solution of water-glass or lime over them. If you are putting in a few each day then fill the crock half full of liquid and place the eggs when gathered, having at least two inches of liquid above the eggs at all times. Store in a cool well-ventilated basement.

Three gallons of either the lime or water glass solutions will preserve 20 dozen eggs. The water glass cost will be about two cents per dozen eggs; one is a little cheaper.

Cooking Qualities.

Eggs preserved by lime or water-glass solutions can be used for nearly all cooking purposes as cakes, custards or omelettes.—H. Stevenson, Dept. of Extension, O. A. College, Guelph.

Losses From Feeding Carcases to Live Stock.

Failure to destroy by burning or burying deeply the carcases of animals that die from various causes frequently results in considerable loss to the neglectful party or other people of the district. Pigs, dogs, cats and carrion birds will carry infection from a carcase over the neighborhood, may become infected themselves and thereby widen the circle of infestation.

In a recent investigation it was brought to light that a man lost eighty chickens from disease. He admitted throwing the dead chickens into the pens where the brood sows were enclosed, and having dumped the cleanings from the chicken house in the hog yard. The sows and their progeny developed tuberculosis, which proved to be the avian type. A test for avian tuberculosis was applied to the poultry flock, and it, too, was found to be infected.

If anything dies, don't use it for pig feed. Bury or burn. Keep the dog and cat away from all carcases and offal, as bacteria which may be virulent and parasite eggs or larvae are almost sure to be present. The application of fire is the best means of destroying animals and birds that may die from any cause.

The Ewe and the Lamb.

If possible, keep the ewe and the lamb in a separate pen for a few days after lambing. If each ewe cannot be kept in a separate pen, only those having lambs at about the same time should be kept together.

Made Him Devout Christian.

Gen. Lew Wallace said that before writing "Ben Hur" he had no fixed religious convictions, but as the story grew and the Christ figure assumed reality his whole life was affected by it and when the work was completed he found himself for the first time in his life a devout Christian.

Since milk is about 87 per cent. water, a cow should have access to all the pure water she will drink.

INTERESTING HAWAIIAN RELICS.

Given by Princess Elizabeth Kalanisanaole to Museum.

The Bishop Museum of Honolulu recently became possessed of historical relics which belonged originally to early and almost mystical dynasties of Hawaiian royalty.

The treasures were presented by Princess Elizabeth Kalanianaole, who for many years was delegate to the U. S. Congress from the Territory of Hawaii. First in order of importance is a giant calabash, or gourd, which has been handed down through royalty from legendary times. This calabash was believed to have the power to send forth winds, and belonged to the almost prehistoric Prince Paoa.

In the beautiful home of Prince Kuhio Kalanianaole on Waikiki Beach was what was called a "Hawaiian Room." It was filled with kahili and rare collection of Hawaiian relics, all of which are included in the gift of the princess to the Bishop Museum. The room had been decorated with the relics of the Kalakaua dynasty that were left to the prince by the king; his aunt, Queen Kapiolani, and from other sources. He took a personal interest in the arrangement, adjusting and rearranging almost to the last week of his life, in 1922.

In built-in glass cases he arranged all the orders of the Kalakaua and Kamehameha dynasties, which he had received from the former Kalakaua and Kapiolani collections, and those he received himself as a prince of the crown, also the orders bestowed upon Hawaiian monarchs by foreign nations and their sovereigns, including Victoria, and the Alexanders and Nicholas of Russia; Edward VII, Great of Germany, the recent kaiser, Napoleon III. of France, the Emperors of Japan and China, the King of Italy, and the sovereigns of Spain and Portugal.

In another case he arranged the rare feather shoulder capes, or ahuulas and the kapas, or neck and head leis, all made of rare feathers and all dating far back to early dynasties. Upon stands were placed rare kahilis, some of which dated back hundreds of years, owned and used by chiefs of mighty names in the past. There were relics that were given to Kalakaua by sovereigns while the Hawaiian monarch was touring the world in the early 80's. There were rare prints showing the old fort, old temples, and scenes that appeared in volumes of an early day. These he placed upon the wall.

In glass cabinets were stored valuable documents and writings of Kalakaua and Kapiolani, many of them relating to the home life of the royal pair.

In another room he placed the large oil portraits of King Kalakaua, Queen Kapiolani, Kamehameha II. and of his mother, Princess Kinoike. All these Princess Kalanianaole designated to go to the museum that they might be preserved in perpetuity.

One Value of Silence.

"Only a Girl"

By Alvah Jordan Garth

"A ring!"

"As you see—in fact, it's an engagement ring."

"Why, Martin! Who are you engaged to?"

"Nobody, as yet. The ring was offered at a bargain. I might need it some time. Now I've got it, I want to give it to some worthy girl who knows how to love. Find her for me."

"Well! I must say you have a queer way of going about it," commented Elvira Mason, the married sister of Marvin Trask.

He was independent, rather than queer. He worked hard and earned money. His thrift and capability, however, did not seem to weigh against the young sprigs of society of Rossville. His sister duly advertised the fact that her brother carried a ring ready to slip on the finger of the young lady who would link her fate with his. His fellows jollied Trask unmercifully, but he never flinched. He had charge of a signal tower at the limits of Rossville, wore overalls when on duty, and was a valued expert in the estimation of his employers.

After working hours, well-dressed and a man in every sense of the word, Trask mingled in local society. He was blunt, never trivial, but entered into all rational sports and pleasures with zest and skill. There were two or three young ladies who had attracted him especially. Ellice Austin was one of them, Hettie Worth was another and Alice Woods a third. The first-named was flattered by his attentions, but it did not take Marvin a week to fathom the shallow, selfish nature.

As to Hettie, her one ambition in life was to keep a string of admirers in tow and suspense. Marvin would not play second fiddle, and promptly dropped her.

Marvin gave up all social connections, was tempted to fling the ring into the river. One day he lost it while on his way to the tower, a short cut past Elsmere, a country mansion.

Elsmere was an old palatial house with extensive grounds, for a long period vacant and recently leased by an old man and his daughter, Lundy, come to Rossville. Mr. Duncan was an invalid, and Elsie Duncan reported to be his constant and devoted nurse. Once, through the palings of the park-like place Marvin had caught sight of a graceful, fairy form gamboling with a pet collie, and had a swift glimpse of a face sweet and lovely. Then, a week later, he had been passing the place when Dr. Hosford Mr. Duncan totter and fall while taking his exercise. Marvin helped raise him up, led him to the open doorway and received a grateful glance from Miss Duncan as he delivered the aged invalid to her charge.

Marvin was on night duty, amid a fearful storm of wind and rain. The situation was one requiring quick and accurate decision in keeping track of trains. He had gone down from the tower to see that all the signals were set, when he made a discovery that electrified him. One signal was missing—just at the bend of the main tracks from the West.

In an instant Marvin, from long experience, realized that the fierce tempest had blown out, or had broken the lamp and set red to the west to halt train 2, for the east tracks were clogged with trains. He knew that the signal was missing, for its reverse white light did not show.

"She'll be due to arrive in five minutes!" he gasped, and made for the tool shanty. Hastily he seized and lit two red lanterns, dashed out and started down the tracks when his foot caught in a switch base and he fell headlong. He tried to rise, but found one foot helpless. Marvin rolled off the rails. Then he looked up with hope and eagerness. A form was approaching toward him.

"I got off the train at the crossing," spoke a feminine voice. "Oh, sir, are you hurt?"

"Miss Duncan!" gasped Marvin, recognizing the speaker. "Those lanterns—you are only a girl, but you may save a hundred lives," and poured out a rapid explanation of the situation.

Elsie Duncan threw off her hat and enveloping overcoat. Her eyes flashed with a true conception of what was required of her. She seized both lanterns and darted down the roadbed. The train was halted, its crew advised of the situation, a substitute sent for and Marvin was conveyed to a doctor's care. He lost sight of his brave assistant amid the confusion, but she came to his sister's home the next day, and they made me blush—the telegram they have sent broadcast about a young girl's heroism, when all the credit belongs to your brother." Marvin heard her tell his sister, and then he fancied he had never known a real woman before, when Elsie came into the room where he lay, tenderly solicitous as to his condition.

The sprain was not as bis eyes chanced to fall upon her hand. One of its fingers bore his lost ring. Elsie had found it two days before, lying in the path that Marvin took to his work.

He said nothing, but his eyes glowed with a new determination. "Is this a fair omen?" he whispered ardently to himself.

It seemed so, indeed, for a month later Elsie Duncan listened to the story of the ring, told in the enticing moonlight by Marvin and supplemented by his avowal of love.

A Good Word for Everybody.

An old lady who had such an inveterate habit of seeking and finding the good points in everybody she met that her granddaughter, slightly irritated, said to her:

"Grandie, I believe you'd find something to praise in Satan himself!"

"Well, my dear," replied the old lady, "you must admit that he is very industrious."

The City of Balkh.

The ancient city of Balkh in Central Asia is called "the Mother of Cities."

BRITAIN'S LITTLE KINGS.

Virtually Monarchs of All They Survey.

Few people are aware of the existence of the many little kingdoms which cluster round Britain's coasts. Yet the majority of these isolated islands boast of strange habits, customs and privileges, which make some of them most interesting and desirable places to live in.

The owners of these baby kingdoms, whilst holding allegiance to King George, are virtually monarchs of all they survey, and no one can reside on the island without their permission. A permission worth having, too, for by various ancient charters granted to past owners the inhabitants of these domains are free from taxation.

One of the most interesting of these islands is the Calf of Man, lying off the southernmost end of the Isle of Man. This island kingdom, which, by grant from the Crown in the days of Good Queen Bess, was declared for ever free of taxation, was purchased just before the war by a Huddersfield manufacturer. It is absolutely a private estate, and nobody can live or even land on it without its ruler's consent.

The island kingdom with the most fascinating history is Lundy, in the Bristol Channel. For a period of seventy years it was ruled by the Rev. O. H. Heaven, who was curate and vicar of the island, and overlord of 1,100 acres, and of fewer than a hundred souls.

Lundy is two and a half miles long, and one mile in width, and, in the past, has been a favorite haunt of smugglers and convicts, pirates and murderers. During its remarkable history it has fallen into the hands of Turkish privateers and French pirates.

Four hundred years ago the Member of Parliament for Barnstaple owned it, and when he was commissioned to take criminals to Virginia he took them instead to Lundy, and worked them for his own profit. Lundy is also free from taxation, and nobody can be raised on it without the permission of the owner.

One of the strangest of island kingdoms is Inishmurray, in Sligo Bay. It is privately owned, and boasts of the remains of a famous monastery established by St. Mulaclus, a disciple of St. Patrick, in the fifth century. Else about this island is that there is one cemetery for women and one, some considerable distance off, for men.

Handa Island, off Tarbet, Loch Harbor, down on the South Coast, is the little islet of Brownsea. For many years Brownsea has been ruled by a king. As far as we can ascertain a ago this island was let for a rental of nine shillings per annum. Three centuries later it was purchased, incredible as it may seem, for a song, for almost absurd sum of £300. The island is six miles long, and has a population of two hundred and forty souls.

A vastly different price was paid for Lewis, one of the largest of the Outer Islands of the Hebrides. It has an area of 437,221 acres, and a population of nearly 3,000. It was ruled for many years of Major Matheson, who bought it for a sum of £20 000 in 1844, and it was later the property of Lord Leverhulme, who spent enormous sums in developing the fishing industry.

Another Scottish island kingdom is Arran, which is ruled over by a lady, the Marchioness of Graham. In one of the large mansions on the island a room Robert Bruce hid himself for a time, and it was from Brodick Bay that he sailed to Carrick to win back Scotland from the English.

Scotland can also be proud of the Isle of Bute, in the Firth of Clyde, owned by the Marquis of Bute. It is said to possess the oldest chimney in all "Bonnie Scotland." Rare flowers can be grown there, and strawberries are to be had in December. The island is forty-eight square miles in extent, with a population of 11,000 people.

NAMES IN QUEBEC.

Many Apparently Genuine French Names Are of Irish Origin.

In an address delivered at Quebec in the year 1872 by Advocate John O'Farrell, an interesting claim is made regarding the Irish settlement of the old province. The speaker set out to prove that many of the apparently genuine French names appearing in the parish records are really of Irish origin. He said it was not generally known that even before Wolfe had scaled the heights leading to the Plains of Abraham, a large Irish element had settled in Lower Canada and become absorbed in the French population.

Many of these, the speaker claimed, had been soldiers in the famous Irish Brigade that had taken so conspicuous a part in the disastrous expedition of Prince and had fought under Sarsfield on many an historic field. These soldiers of fortune drifted to Canada for a life of peace, and, having taken part in warfare against England, did not care to return home after Canada had passed to the British crown. Speaking to ex-Premier French, they simply disappeared about the country and became part of the general public. In due course they married, and the children thus reared had the Gallicizing of their Irish names occurred at the baptism of their children.

The speaker claim is made that the curse of the day were unable to pronounce the Irish names of the fathers, and gave to them the nearest spelling they could get in the French. Thus, said Mr. O'Farrell, "Thimote Sylvain" was originally clothing other than Timothy O'Sullivan. "Pierre Boulan" served to associates as Peter Boylan; and perhaps one of the most interesting assertions is that "Jean Batiste Riel," married at Isle du Pads in 1704, had been known in Limerick as Jack Reilly. This throws some new light on the later famous Louis Riel, a direct descendant, according to Mr. O'Farrell.

The speaker had searched the parish registers in churches fh and about Quebec, and set forth day and date in support of his interesting assertions. No good story is without its humor, and it will not hurt to imagine that many a present-day Irishman on a visit to Quebec, and finding trouble in getting his tongue around the odd-looking names in the directory, is merely trying to pronounce what was once the proud sognomen of his forebears.

The Blighted Tree

By Selden Emelle Bolmon

"As this tree shall blossom, so shall your life be fair and happy and beautiful."

Alice Clyde blushed and looked happy just now. Why should not the clever fortune teller use the tree as a simile, for had not the shrewd gypsy woman seen Alice's lover, brave, handsome Wylie Davis, leave its shade with a kiss for Alice, and was it not under that same graceful cherry tree their mutual troth had been plighted?

And with the radiant future thus outlined, Alice devoted the week to tender attention for the lover who was going away for a few months to close up some business in war-ridden Mexico.

He had been left some Mexican mining interests by an uncle; insurrection had disturbed its regular operations and Wylie was anxious to dispose of it.

It was a solace and a pleasure to Alice to sit under the tree often after that. The blossoms came and the spot where fond memories clustered became a cherished oasis.

One morning Alice took the daily newspaper and proceeded to her favorite seclusion. Her mother, working about the house, ran out quickly as from the garden there rang out a shriek, shrill and echoing.

As she reached the open doorway she made out Alice, lying prostrate under the tree. A young man, passing along the street, leaped the fence and was at the side of the prostrate girl almost as soon as her anguished mother.

"Oh, Mr. Trumbull! help me get her into the house," breathed the distracted mother. Just then Alice's sister, Rosamond, joined the others. A newspaper was tightly clasped in Alice's hand. They lifted her and bore her to a couch in the sitting room.

"Will you hurry for a doctor, Mr. Trumbull, please?" spoke Rosamond. "This is something more than a faint."

The young man departed on wings of fleetness. Her anxiety in his grave, earnest face was as intense as that displayed by mother and sister. It might well be, for he had been an aspirant for the love of Alice before Wylie had supplanted him.

Like the true man that he was, although hurt to the soul, Trumbull had accepted the award of fate. Alice had continued to be kind to him.

Within the hour the cause of Alice's collapse was known. In the newspaper she had read an item telling of an attack of insurgents upon the mine owned by Wylie. Ten of the workmen had been massacred, a number of others carried away as prisoners and Wylie Davis was missing.

The shock prostrated Alice utterly. For two weeks she lay torpid, fevered, and came back to life weak and broken. She spoke calmly but despairingly of Wylie. "He is dead, she said—my soul tells me I shall never see him again." Then one day she proffered a request that blanched her mother's face and caused Rosamond to quiver with dismay.

"Mother," spoke Alice feebly, "it would be a comfort to me to sleep in the light, sun and air are like right by the cherry tree where I stood with Wylie."

"My dear Alice," quavered the perturbed mother, "the doctor insists that the light, sun and air are like right by the cherry tree where I stood with Wylie."

"I shall die if you don't do as I say," said Alice. "I want to die anyway, now that Wylie's gone."

Rosamond hastened out her desire. The doctor told Mrs. Clyde that they must do something to answer her wish.

"But the tree was spoiled up in the storm two weeks ago," sobbed the anguished mother, "and when Alice sees this she will regard it the final order of fate."

When Dale Trumbull called to inquire about Alice that evening Rosamondetold him of their new anxiety. Her grief appealed to him and aroused his deepest compassion.

"Something must be done," he spoke after a period of deep reflection, "yes, I think I know what, but Alice must never know."

For two nights, with the aid of others, Dale Trumbull delved and toiled by moonlight in his own orchard a flourishing cherry tree, as near the prototype of the one that had been destroyed as could be found. When, two days later, Alice was removed to another room, her eyes rested seemingly upon the tree she so cherished. The sight of it seemed to quiet, to console her, and Dale was glad, and Rosamond labored up into his honest face with a gratitude that somehow seemed to give him a new interest in the sister of the woman he had loved and lost.

They he arrived, flushed and breathless, at the Clyde garden gate, where Rosamond stood. He had news—great news! Wylie had escaped from his captors and he was coming home! The young man, a good man, if Dale was a trifle, sad, he was also happy as he saw the old light of hope come back to the wan face of Alice.

And once more the reunited lovers stood under the cherry tree's shade. And later, after they had married and gone away, at the self-same spot Dale Trumbull, who had learned to cherish the sterling, kindly impulses of the loyal sister, asked Rosamond to become his wife.

Timely Warning.

A sturdy tramp went into a suburban garden where the lady of the house was occupied in attending to her flowers. He took no notice of her refusal to give him some copper, but continued to annoy her until a large dog appeared, barking loudly. The lady seized his collar and held it, calling out: "You had better go; it may bite." "You ain't got no right to keep a savage dog," replied the tramp. "Perhaps I have not," she answered coolly. "If you think so, I won't keep him. I'll let him go!"

An Object Lesson

(Copyright, 1919, by Western Newspaper Union.)

Idler, busybody and mischief maker, Abel Drake, the pest and gossip of Brookville, paused at the gate of the little home occupied by John Rolfe and his wife. He fumbled in his pocket, drew forth a piece of chalk and chuckled.

"Now's my chance!" grinned the big, loutish fellow. "I'll stir up something!"

John Rolfe, behind a clump of shelvering lilac bushes, stared vaguely, then suspiciously, and then with a lowering brow viewed the intruder, who passed up the walk in a stealthy way. He stared harder as Drake placed one knee upon the lowermost step of the porch. Slowly the fists of John Rolfe closed and unclosed. He hunched back as if actuated to a sudden spring. Drake reached up to the top step.

"Scold," he scrawled.

John Rolfe, furious of face, a hurricane of indignation and resentment, made a dash and then a grab. He had the writhing despoiler of those immaculate steps in his grasp. He hesitated, poised him aloft. Drake uttered a gasp and half a yell.

"Hold on! Hold on! I was only playing a joke."

"It will cost you something," growled John. "Now, then, you meddling, malevolent scum, lick it up; rub it up, just as you ought to and got to."

And then, poising the miscreant Drake as he would a disarray, John swung him face down over the steps. He played his nose over the ill-natured chronicle in chalk. A smear showed where the word had been. John righted and reversed Drake and had him down upon the lower step, with the words:

"You sit there or I'll sit down upon you!"

Drake's face was a sight. His nasal organ was flattened and splintery. His cheeks and chin suggested a baker disfigured by the floury substance he handled. He acted scared; he looked sheepish.

"I only thought—" he began timorously.

"You only thought you'd stick another pin in the only woman in town who isn't a gadder and a gossip-monger, and minds her own business!" thundered John. "Squirm, flatten out like the grease spot that you are. Blow up and bust for all I care, but don't you get up or try to sneak away, or I'll lug you to the pond and give you the ducking of your life!"

"I'm sorry, Rolfe; honest I am. What you want of me?" stammered the crestfallen Drake.

"I want to give you an object lesson. I want to send you back to your gossiping brood with a new point of view. Because my wife keeps to herself and talks of her mind on her own premises, which she has a right to do, you fancy it's quite the thing to humiliate her by acts that just about fit a digger Indian. Scold? Oh, goodness! I'm around to help her relieve her poor tired mind when the strain gets too heavy; I'd be a fine specimen, wouldn't I, to sneak off leaving her with no chance to do it. I'm waiting," said Abel Drake. "What with dragging mud into the house and dropping tobacco over the place, and keeping it like a disorderly rag bag, it's a wonder she don't fire the rolling pin after me and sue for a divorce!"

"Of course! Of course!" hobbed and cringed Drake, fearing his aroused, eloquent captor might work himself up to a point where he would pull his ears out straighter.

"Now, then, up with you, and in with you!" and seizing the shrinking Drake by the collar, John forced him into the house. "Here's a scrub brush and a pail, sir, pitiful. Just rest your eyes on that layout," and he dragged Drake into the kitchen, orderly and shining, and showing a table full of appetite-provoking viands and bitter. "Duplicate it if you can in this town! Out again! Sit down!" and he landed his mussed-up visitor on the step with a force that made Drake grunt, and then relate to a little blubbery. Five years ago, the time my wife rescued a little child from in front of an automobile, she got a knock that has given her headaches ever since. She's a queer, eh? Wouldn't some of those gewgawed, useless women who screamed and fainted away and didn't lift a finger to save the child have acted queer after an adventure like that? But the knock did not take the goodness out of Martha. When she gets tired she talks, and it's the sweetest voice on earth to me if it is a deserved raking over the coals for me. Now, sweep your soul. Then think of her slaving for me, lonely and tired because she's in a rut with homely, dull old curmudgeon like me, I feel like kicking myself! For your meanness in going to make matters worse I'll kick you instead. Get out!"

John, a queer smile upon his lips, went out on the street and rambled about for an hour in a desultory way. He felt tremendously relieved. He had seized an opportunity to say what he wished to convey to Martha, but had never ventured to do so. All the time of his talk to Drake he had been thinking of Martha and his attitude listening to every work he spoke.

People wondered after that at the change in Martha Rolfe. It did not come all at once, but before the year ended the new gentility fully developed. Her neighbors marveled at the transition. Not so John. Wisely he was silent, for he had rewakened love in the soul of his wife.

Iron That Can Be Whittled.

It is well known that rapid cooling of hot metals hardens them. That the opposite is true has recently been demonstrated in striking fashion by the General Electric company. One of their scientists annealed American ingot iron surrounded by hydrogen gas for three hours at a temperature above 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. The product was very little harder than the softest copper, and can be whittled with a knife.—Scientific American.

In addition to a full quota of unusually interesting stories and articles, the August number of Rod and Gun in Canada, the Canadian sportsman's magazine, contains a wealth of information for the outdoorsman, the fisherman and the gun crank in the regular articles and full synopses of the hunting and fishing seasons and laws, for the provinces of Canada and Newfoundland. It also includes the announcement of the annual amateur photographic contest in which $700 in prizes is being awarded.

Among the stories of general sporting interest, Basswood Lake to Whitefish, an account of a canoe trip, which while it recounts the second part of the voyage, is a complete story, written in a swinging narrative. Sidelight of Nipigon tells of trout fishing and is written by Ozark Ripley, who wields a rod even better than a very polished pen. Judge A. B. Cohn, of Toledo, O., is enthusiastic over Canada as a sportsman's paradise in recounting his moose hunting experiences at Temiskaming, under the caption, "A Judge Goes Hunting." Other articles equally good contribute to make the issue a highly attractive one.
